Description

Executive Summary
An advanced attack initiated from a successful phishing email launched by a user has been observed on two machines within your organization. From our preliminary investigation, two users opened emails with a malicious PDF file that caused the default browser to navigate to a malicious domain that then created a decoy PDF and a malicious DLL, which then communicated to a command and control server.

We recommend further investigation and actions be taken immediately in response to this threat.

Timeline of Observed Events
A breakdown of key events from the attack on the compromised machines is as follows:

- (11/14/2018 9:59 AM UTC) User opened email in Outlook that contained the malicious PDF, which then causes the default browser to connect to a malicious domain and makes the browser create a .LNK and .ZIP file.
- (11/14/2018 9:59 AM UTC) PowerShell opens the LNK and then creates the malicious payload utilizing Cobalt Strike, cyzfc.dat. PowerShell also creates a decoy PDF with the same name as the one opened in the email and launches it in AcroRd32.exe to make the user believe that the PDF was opened as expected.
- (11/14/2018 9:59 AM UTC) PowerShell launches rundll32.exe which loads the cyzfc.dat payload, which connected to a malicious command and control server on port 443.
